Invisible Racing at Gutten burg To-Day Over an Icy Track in the Fog.

Other Alleged Winners-Gladiator, Blossom, Firefly and Jack Rose.

GUTTENBURG RACE TRACK, Feb. 6 .-It is a question whether horses ever raced over a worse track than that at Guttenburg to-day. It was something fearful. The snow of the early morning had become coated with ice at least half an inch thick. As soon as the management determined to race, harrows were sent over it, and the track was soon converted into a mixture of sharp pieces of ice, snow and mud.

Ice covered everything and when the regulars arrived at the track, they saw an army of workmen busily chopping the ice from the brick lawn and making paths to the paddock, otherwise the safety of pedestrians

The pieces of ice that formed part of Guttenburg's track to-day would be valuable curfosities at the World's Pair if they could only be preserved. It would be hard to make believe that racing was held under

The attendance was very slim to-day. Outside of the bookmakers, clerks and other employees of the track but few people were t. A thick fog helped make all hands heerful and comfortable.

Misery, an appropriately named horse for such a day, won the first race handly from Trump, a 6 to 1 choice. Scabright, who was heavily played for a good thing, was third. A thick fog settled over the track, obscuring everything but the finish.

crowd wanted to bet on Remorse in the second, but unfortunately he was scratched. Gladiator was favorite in the second race, and he won very handily. Priscilla, second choice, was a poor third, Red Elm, at 20 to 1, splitting the pair.

Blossom, the favorite in the third race, we hands down from Inspector C, whose race to-day showed a remarkable improvement over his last performance. He was second choice. Elite filly was third.

NO SILVER REPEAL.

Hill Urges the Senate in Vain to Take Up the Bill.

Yeas to 42 Nays.

Repeal Declared the Essential Step Towards True Bimetallism.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.-In the Senate this morning Mr. Hill (Dem., N. Y.) presented a petition of the business men of Rochester, N. Y., irrespective of party, in favor of the repeal of the Sherman act, and said that in connection with the presentation of the petition he desired to submit to the consideration of the Senate some remarks on what was know

Mr. Hill said that when the Sherman Act was passed, two and a half years ago, he had been exceedingly shoc ed and alarmed; and that four months before his election to the Senate he had gone to the city of New York and there publicly taken issue against the principle of the policy embodied in that law, endeavoring to arouse a public that instead of stience and apathy there was favor of the repeal of the Sherman act.

Mr. Hill quoted from the platforms of the two great National parties at Calcago and Minneapolis, both of which, he said, demanded the use of both gold and sliver as standard money. It was his duty, he said, to the city and State of New York to ask in their behalf the immediate, unconditional repeal of the Sherman law, which repeal would bring a season of inancial calm instead of a wide-spread fear of a monetary panic. It was his higher duty (considering the state of opinion in the Senate) with respectful deference to his colleagues of both parties in whose hands were wisdom and decision, to advance and substantiate one conclision, to advance and substantiate one con-ful deterance to his colleagues of both parties in whose hands were wisdom and decision, to advance and substantiate one controlling reason for the repeal of the Sherman not—and that was that its repeal was a necessary, safe and (for the day) sufficient step towards free bimetallic coinage.

Four years ago the Tressury had $218,000,000 in gold; now that sum had dwindled to $100,000,000. A revival of the Bland-Allison act would keep up the shrinkage. The Sherman law was undermining the power of the Tressury, in not to constitute the discharge of the National debt, at least to meet the parity obligation of the Government, and was operating an enormous shrinkage in the business of the country and its total circulating medium.

When free bimetallic coinage ceased in 1873 parity ceased, and the gold half of the world's money became dislocated from the silver half. When their coupling should be renewed, their stable parity would be renewed. Nothing could establish parity except free bimetallic coinage, that which had created and maintained their parity in the past. He should prefer that solution of the question to any entanging alliance by means of the principle did not half realize the overwhelming power of the United States. By means of free bimetallic coinage the United States had been able to conner upon all nations the boundless benefits of the gold of California and by means of it again the United States had been able to confer upon all nations the boundless benefits of the gold of California and by means of it again the United States had been able to confer upon all nations the boundless benefits of the gold of California and by means of it again the United States had been able to confer upon all nations the boundless benefits of the gold of California and by means of it again the United States would be enabled to confer upon all nations the boundless tenefits of the gold of California and by means of it again the United States would be crabled to confer upon all nations the boundless tenefits of the gold of C and Arizona.

The time for conference was past; the time for independent action had come. The repeat of the Sherman law was, in his opinion, the only action needed to test and fulfil the endeavor to reach free bimetailic coinage by the route of an international agreement. That was the point on which all his remarks were meant to converge.

By the repeal of the Sherman law action by Great Britain would at once become in-

By the repeal of the Sherman law action by Great Britain would at once become incritable. Other European hations might take their time, but not so Great Britain. The United states Treasury, too, would then be relieved of its great danger of a run on the Treasury cold.

The Democratic party was pledged to the repeal of the Sherman law, and the party should live up to its pledges. He knew that there would be some revulsion, some discontent; ne knew that the Interest of silver miners might be disturbed; but that price would have to be paid. In closing his speech Mr. Hill said that he compliance with numerous requests made to him, he desired to have the bill made a special order for some day that might suit the convenience of the Senate. Afterwards he asked that the day be Tburnday.

The Vice-President said the bill must be taken up before it could be made a special order.
